Course content (incl. planned learning activities and teaching methods)	 During this term Research will focus on quantitative research design and methodologies. The relation with marketing is clear. One element of the external analysis is conducting a target group analysis. Next to desk research (getting consumer data out of statistical reports, existing marketing reports etc.), it is also important to get reliable consumer insights related to the marketing assignment. During this project you will learn how collect those insights using an online survey. To execute this well, it is necessary to focus on your problem analysis to determine the core subjects. So, by focussing on quantitative research you will gain insights and skills in designing quantitative research (problem analysis, research methodology and justification), using online surveys to gather consumer data and insights. You will learn how to create an online survey based on an item list and how to design a survey using the online program Qualtrics. To get as many respondents as possible to your online survey you will also come up with a promotion plan (using target group segmentation if needed). You will also learn how to process and analyse quantitative data using SPSS. We will pay extra attention to using explanatory tools and models, and how to interpret or understand the research output. You will learn techniques to understand the justification and significance of your output to draw conclusions. In the end you will learn how to create a research infographic based on the research results. You will share your findings and infographic in class, so that other can use your research data as well for their marketing plans.
